

A-501: Log - 1

Date : 12/09/1998

Time of writing : 8:14 pm

12th of May, 1998, Anomalous Object 501/A-501 was submitted by a local village at 12:09 pm from Greenland, specific location is not to be given as said place is currently under investigation.

Locals testify that the object was not connected with them anyway or form in terms of religion as they also seem to not know of any of its properties or origins.

It was first found by the village chief's wife as she used it while preparing dinner finding the object to be nice for decoration in which after dinner, found its anomalous property as it never burnt out causing her to report it to her husband who then inspects it before calling the Government about it, which led to our discovery of it

Description:

It seems to be a red candle with some scent of iron which is presumed to be blood.

It is also seemingly indestructible as after an attempt it would reappear where it was approximately before its destruction as such it cannot be terminated

It is yet to be studied for the time as due to lack of cooperation as our research team currently is fatigued by A-200. Its only current known properties are:

- It cannot run out of wax as the wax itself seems to be endlessly regenerating
- It cannot burn out as though the wicket is flammable observed to be unable to be burn away
- It cannot be terminated through current means as it would reappear back after "destruction"

Following Head Researcher Yi Jhang's order, Experiment A-501-1 will be done tomorrow which will involve testing of theories said by the locals
